Student Experience

Learning the skills of dialogue: Students learn and practise the skills of dialogue in the classroom before engaging in dialogue through videoconferences or online.

Connecting through videoconferences: We connect classrooms across the world, allowing students to explore their own views, while encountering the views of others. It is a safe space, with a trained facilitator to manage the flow of the discussion.

Connecting online: On the online community students work in small groups, with students from around the world, sharing their views and engaging in dialogue on prearranged topics.

Support for Teachers

Resources: We have developed flexible modules that enable the effective teaching of the skills of dialogue. These can be incorporated into existing curricula and suit a range of educational systems.

Tools: Our online learning community provides a simple overview of students' activities, allows the booking of activities, and helps to manage workflow.

Training: Generation Global can provide professional development through workshops and webinars, as well as supporting teachers through a number of dedicated helpdesks around the world.

“The hour of dialogue flew by as the students had to step outside their comfort zones and engage students from a very different culture.”

“When I first got the chance to join in one of the videoconferences, I was really nervous because I was scared that the people I would talk to wouldn't understand my language. Yet, after the conference I realized that I was never this wrong about anything in my whole life. They listened to what I had to say about our culture and in return, I also wanted to learn more about theirs. Yes, we belong to different cultures and yes, we are located at the opposite sides of the world but deep down we are all human and are all equal.”
